My wife Andrea and I moved to a 38 acre parcel in the North Branch of Antrim in September 2014. We moved from Massachusetts, away from the sounds of the city, its congestion, constant construction and pollution, with plans to start a family in a quiet, serene location. After seeing this property, all the outdoor activities around us, and the quaint country feeling in the woods, we made an immediate offer. Our first hike behind our new house, abutting Windsor Mountain, was on October 5th 2014. It was the most amazing view, as seen below, taken that same day:

We have just welcomed our son Thomas, now 3 months old, to our family. We have been active with him on our property from the moment we brought him home. We make use of our property and have invested a lot of time to make it welcoming to family and friends. We want to share the beautiful sights and excitement of this special part of New Hampshire. Here we are with Thomas at one and half months old at the same spot:

As you can see in the background of each picture, is the topic of concern for us and many other Antrim residents: Tuttle Hill and the proposed site of the Antrim Wind Energy project.

We are wholly opposed to the plans for the destruction of this pristine environment for the benefit of a private corporation. We have read all the news articles, meeting testimony and even read into both sides of this long standing battle. We are still not convinced that a project of this magnitude will not have a significant impact on the surrounding wildlife and our own quality of life, to which we've become accustomed.

Although this plan has been rejected twice previously, AWE seems persistent in this project. Despite the seemingly insignificant revisions to this plan, AWE is still proposing their largest project ever, with no previous project of this scale. How can we put our trust into this private company?

In conclusion, we hope the SEC rejects AWE's proposal for a third and final time. If this proposal is passed we will certainly consider listing our house to move outside of Antrim.

Sincerely,
Adam & Andrea Jurewich
