Dear Pamela,

I am writing to state my objection to the proposed plan for electrical towers in the town of Newington, NH. This little village has been "assaulted" enough.

Why can't we emulate the method used in Europe which is underground utilities. The method of construction boring could be a more cost effective approach, particularly with respect to maintenance. There would be no downed wires resulting from the fierce New England storms.

As a Newington resident I remain strongly opposed to the Eversource proposal.

Thank you.
