Yes, the power line could be buried. Oh, that would cost more. Yes, but if the power line is SO IMPORTANT to the states south of New Hampshire that would be the beneficiaries of the electricity they should pay the true cost of what they are getting. Asking New Hampshire bear the environmental cost for their electricity is both unfair and obscene. That is particularly so in that Eversource and its enablers sometimes play up the "greenness" of this electricity -- a proposition that is not at clear when you take into account the loss of forests in Canada.
