My husband and I are hikers and regular travelers in the north country. I can tell you definitely that we would NOT like to see electric towers coming through our wonderful New Hampshire landscape. We love traveling there and would be revolted/saddened to have to look at huge electric towers, not only in the White Mountains, but coming straight down our state, close to home in Sanbornton and in other towns going south.

We also travel from time to time to Quebec City, where going up by highway, the highlight of the landscape is huge electric towers and so many of them!! Do they think the Canadians don't care---perhaps they don't. Well, they don't have the lovely White Mountains we have south of them and we DO CARE!! New Hampshire people don't want towers from the Canadian border down to the southern parts of our state. We don't need their electricity and if they can't bury the entire line, they should care enough about New Hampshire to drop the whole thing. Unfortunately for them it's the almighty dollar and using a good portion of it to compromise with all of us, they don't seem willing!!

We feel strongly enough about this that we would stand in front of any bulldozer that tries to start this project the wrong way. We hope it doesn't come to that, but we will put our bodies in front of their "progress" and even risk arrests if it comes to that. Mary & Joe Swan
