Subject: Northern Pass Comments

Good Day, Hope all is well.

In regards to the proposed northern pass.

At what point do we just not care anymore about the remaining unspoiled, scenic places that are left?

When does the last resemblance of the power of place no longer exist?

Once these area's are scarred, they are scarred for decades or for all time. And then when they are considered obsolete, who will then restore them back to their original state? Certainly not the constructors, more than likely,

as usual, the tax and

or rate payer, if it is done at all.

There need to be an understanding, a realization that giant corporations or share holders should not have the most influence because they have the most purchasing power, that just as easily buys land as it does influence.

If this project is even viable for the future of N.E. power there is no good reason it shouldn't or can't be buried along existing, established corridors or routes. This option would have less short and long term consequences to the beauty of the entire North Country and any environmental impact would be negligible.

Thanking You in Advance
