Dear Pamela Monroe,

A jagged scar raised above the tree line of NH benefits the residents in no manner and only detracts from its natural beauty.

In all aspects this is a bad deal for NH and there are other means of clean renewable energy that residents of Massachusetts can install in their own natural resources, in their, lines of sites and on their roof tops to lower their energy bills. A jagged scar to help the residents of Massachusetts who will not help themselves only benefits the energy companies.

If the residents of Massachusetts really wanted to lower their energy bills they would take advantage of the many solar rebates and install wind farms.

Sincerely,
