Dear Pamela Monroe,

The beauty of NH's outdoor sanctuaries is the number one thing that has brought me back to this state as a young professional. The mountains and woods and wetlands are all irreplaceable if we damage them. I've seen it happen to natural spots like Willand Pond in Somersworth and other areas that were once lush natural recreation spots for the region that were ruined irrevocably by development coming in. I understand that the Northern Pass is trying to mitigate the damage it will cause, and will not necessarily be building big building in the middle of the White Mountains — but the level to which they must disturb the wildlife and natural resources in order to put this project in place is too high a risk. I've been very active on social issues in the past, but the environment and conservation of our natural resources is one thing that cannot simply be corrected by the next generation. This is our best resource and we cannot jeopardize it. More young people will continue to work and live here if we keep it beautiful and open for recreation. Say no to The Northern Pass. Thank you!

Sincerely,
Crystal Paradis
