According to DOE's own analysis, Northern Pass will:

1. Cause adverse impacts to tourism and recreation.
2. Negatively affect the historic context of architectural resources.
3. Cause impacts to vegetated habitats and land disturbance, impacting archeological resources and wildlife, including protected species.
4. Result in long-term wetlands impacts as compared to the other action alternatives.

Why is it moving forward? I, like every community in this destructive project's path, am against it. Will the SEC listen to the folks who would see their communities ravaged, or with the business interests spending immense sums to urge the SEC to ignore these realities?
