Dear Pamela Monroe,

Dear Project The Granite State,

There is no way to sugar coat the environmental impact of running these lines and building these towers.

Our most valuable resource is the beauty of our landscape and the habitat for our varied wildlife game and non game alike.

As an outdoors family 4 generations deep in the rural areas of NH we have seen the negative irreversible impact of such projects.

In my case I can show you where after 50 years, where they have changed the landscape for progress or some short term financial gain, it has never returned to the pristine and natural state for either humans plants or animals.

This is a bad idea and the economic gain is not worth the negative environmental impact. The unsightly nature of more swaths cut through our landscape will have a negative effect on tourism our #1 revenue stream in NH.

Sincerely,
Ernest Millette
