Subject: Rural America Gets Bad Vibrations From Big Wind - WSJ

Dear Chairperson Martin & SEC Committee & Sub-Committee Members,

If you look at the most recent SEC wind docket in NH.....you will notice that it embodies all of the concerns and issues that are cited here and then some.

<https://www.wsj.com/articles/rural-america-gets-bad-vibrations-from-big-wind-11620251138>

Putting aside the full time gas dependency of any wind system in NH and that the low capacity and low correlation to grid demand power is sent to states that won't "host" these fifty story, 110 decibel climate charlatans themselves.....living near giant industrial wind turbines is evidently no picnic as the ongoing suffering in Antrim NH clearly demonstrates.

When a home is literally turned from a sanctuary to a prison..... when opening a window just lets in more relentless noise..... when sleep is a challenge no matter how tired you are.....it's safe to say you are likely a resident of Antrim NH living close enough to a fifty story 110 decibel earth shaking industrial turbine.

But hey.....it's not you, your neighbors, or your town right? I'm pretty confident not a single member of this committee would want to suffer the way some Antrim residents apparently are so other states can pat themselves on the back for the illusion of being green.

Thanks for your time and consideration and for your service to our state.

Larry Goodman
